Invitation to the Conference

To Banks and Banking Institutions

Deployment of a digital banking system based on the creation of a new international organization and a new international security system

Digitalization offers new opportunities and prospects for banks. But the transition period inevitably brings many risks, vulnerabilities and threats associated with a lack of institutions.

Non-banking innovative digital financial instruments allow earning, but undermine markets, economies and banking infrastructures. Legislation remains national and corporate at a time when transactions have become cross-border and inclusive.

The digital prospects for the banking system today are astounding:

- Smart money with embedded privacy, security and control requires the deployment of a new digital banking system that will institutionally absorb existing Fintech services.
- New solidary capital concentration systems need new financial instrument strategies, hedging strategies and highly liquid projects.
- Digital currencies must be backed by digital assets that ensure their issuance and guarantee a return on bank capital.
- Legitimization and asset management need a new global “digital property” institution, which is an institution of cross-border jurisdiction and provides the legal capacity and legal basis for digital asset banking transactions in today's globally inclusive environment.
- The digital monetization of value added in the intangible assets (information, personal data, intellectual property, multi-stakeholder cooperation processes, public good, etc.) significantly expands the market for financial assets and instruments.

The deployment of a “digital institutional platform”, which would provide cross-border regulation and legal enforcement, is necessary to reduce risks and safely convert digital opportunities into banking system development.

The above-mentioned perspectives are realized in the framework of the New International Security System by creating a new international organization, the International Hub for the Management of Sustainable Development Projects. This organization is being established with the participation of banks and provides for the development of digital banking services and financial tools for digital property management.

On behalf of the Conference Committee, we invite your bank to participate in the Constituent International Conference New International Security System – establishment of the International Hub for the Management of Sustainable Development Projects.
